

Is your copy legal?

You are permitted to:

- make copies of materials for which you own the copyright;
- make copies of material for which copyright has been cleared or a license has been obtained;
- use a projector, or similar device, to display a copy during class;
- materials that have a Creative Commons licence or other open licence (e.g., GNU Free licence);
- materials that are in the Public Domain (i.e., no longer protected by copyright).
PLEASE NOTE that most content that is publicly available on the internet is copyright-protected and not in the Public Domain;
- copy short excerpts* of material for the purpose of research, private study, criticism, review, news reporting, parody, satire, or education (one copy per registered student) under the Fair Dealing exception of the Canadian Copyright Act.

*see <https://library.usask.ca/copyright/general-information/fair-dealing-guidelines.php>

You may not:

- make copies (hardcopy or digital) that exceed the Fair Dealing exception of the Canadian Copyright Act, including placing said copies on library reserve;
- assume that you are permitted to copy or distribute materials obtained through logins or secure credentials without first considering the above point;
- change a work in any way while copying (e.g., by editing or changing the phrasing or editing a diagram);
- scan, download or upload electronic copies (PDFs, Word documents, etc.) of copyright-protected material and post to PAWS, Blackboard or course websites if copies exceed the Fair Dealing exception or other exceptions in the Canadian Copyright Act.
